

Win journalists trust with your corporate PR website

In dealing with journalists and editors consider 2 things: your credibility as a source and the short time span they have for their tasks. You should also know they do most of their research on the internet. The conclusion: what journalists find on your corporate PR website determines the quantity and quality of your company or brand media coverage.

There are many studies about the internet's impact on PR activity. Recently, we at Selenis also did a 5 months study, asking business editors what they like or dislike about corporate PR websites.

The most important reasons they enter a corporate PR website are to find:

- the names and contacts of the PR people
- basic information about the company (managers' names and details, headquarters etc.)
- financial data and results
- statements about important events
- downloadable photos for their articles

Considering the above, here are 7 recommendations to optimize your corporate PR website in order to earn the journalists' trust:

1. Publish the contacts of the PR person

It's the main reason journalists land on your website. So make sure you have a media person who doesn't mind being bothered by them. See that they can easily find:

- full name and the exact role in the PR department;
- direct phone number (not the company's gatekeeper);
- personal email address (not a generic address like "office@" or "PR@");

2. Make the company profile easy to find and understand

Like any internet user, journalists are in a hurry and seek texts in plain language. So make sure all the important company information can be found in a single place and are written only in non-technical words.

A company profile should include:

- field of activity, main products or services provided to customers
- company size (number of employee, subsidiaries, markets)
- short company history and important achievements
- financial data (at least: revenue, profit and, for specific markets, company investments)

ABOUT GLAXOSMITHKLINE

- Overview
- Key Facts
- Our Heritage
- The Merger
- Board of Directors
- Corporate Executive Team
- Developing World Challenges
- Animals in Research
- Publications

GlaxoSmithKline (GSK) is a world leading research-based pharmaceutical company with a powerful combination of skills and resources that provides a platform for delivering strong growth in today's rapidly changing healthcare environment.

GSK's mission is to improve the quality of human life by enabling people to do more, feel better and live longer.

Headquartered in the UK and with operations based in the US, the new company is one of the industry leaders, with an estimated seven per cent of the world's pharmaceutical market.

GSK also has leadership in four major therapeutic areas - anti-infectives, central nervous system (CNS), respiratory and gastro-intestinal/metabolic. In addition, it is a leader in the important area of vaccines and has a growing portfolio of oncology products.

The company also has a Consumer Healthcare portfolio comprising over-the-counter (OTC) medicines, oral care products and nutritional healthcare drinks, all of which are among the market leaders.

Based on 2001 Annual Results, GSK had sales of £20.5 billion ($29.5 billion) and profit before tax of £6.2 billion ($8.8 billion). Pharmaceutical sales accounted for £17.2 billion ($24.8 billion) with new products representing 22% of total pharmaceutical sales.

GSK has over 100,000 employees worldwide. Of these, over 40,000 are in sales and marketing, the largest sales force in the industry. Over 42,000 employees work at 99 manufacturing sites in 39 countries and over 16,000 are in R&D.

GSK R&D is based at 24 sites in seven countries. The company has a leading position in genomics/genetics and new drug discovery technologies. The GSK R&D budget is about £2.4bn/$4bn.

Learn more about:

- ☐ Our latest financial results
- ☐ Our work within the community, and programmes in the developing world
- ☐ How we develop new medicines
- ☐ Partnership with GSK
- ☐ Career opportunities

→

The GSK corporate PR website presents an extensive but condensed company profile, that helps journalists to learn everything they need about the company, in only one page.

3. Publish information about the top management

This information is useful for journalists because they:

- find out how to correctly spell the names of top managers (especially when they are foreigners)
- determine if and who should they interview for specific topics (environment, HR, operations)
- find out background information about each top manager (previous positions, fields of expertise, education, professional training or hobbies)

BP at a glance	+
Our strategy	+
What we do	+
Board and executive team	—
The board	+
Executive team	—
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▶ Bob Dudley ▶ Dr Brian Gilvary ▶ Rupert Bondy ▶ Tufan Erginbilgic ▶ Bob Fryar ▶ Andy Hopwood ▶ Bernard Looney ▶ Lamar McKay ▶ Dev Sanyal ▶ Helmut Schuster
People and values	+
Our brands	+
History of BP	+
BP worldwide
Products and services

Executive team

Our executive management team, their roles and responsibilities

> Bob Dudley

Group chief executive

> Dr Brian Gilvary

Chief financial officer

> Rupert Bondy

Group general counsel

> Tufan Erginbilgic

Chief executive, Downstream

> Bob Fryar

Executive vice president, safety and operational risk

> Andy Hopwood

Group operating officer, strategy and regions, Upstream

On the BP corporate PR website, you can find any type of executive information, from their studies and career to their hobbies and outside interests

4. Publish fully documented press releases

When journalists sense a media “vibe” about a company, the first thing they do is to search for the original press release on the company PR website. In order to decide whether it's an interesting story they seek:

- background information about a new launched product/service or campaign
- the explanations behind an important financial communication or event
- the person who they can interview on the press release's topic

Display the releases in chronological order and group them by year, month or category.

5. Show relevant media coverage of your company

Journalists and editors trust more what their colleagues already wrote about the company than what the company has to say. They will search for other media mentions of a topic, whether you like it or not.

This is why you can win their trust if you provide a balanced overview of media coverage right on your corporate PR website. That is the only place where you can make your arguments heard, in the case of a negative coverage of your company.

For each media mention of your brand include:

- the name of the editor that wrote the specific media clip
- the link to the original media, where this is possible

About UsNews CoveragePress KitContact UsJoin Our TeamNews Coverage

Tellme Networks has won significant coverage in leading newspapers and magazines, both in print and online, since being founded in February 1999. Recent headlines and key historical pieces are highlighted here. Also feel free to check out the 1999 Archives.

THE TORONTO STAR

Voice portals give people new tool to talk and surf
Michael Liedtke, Associated Press, February 8, 2001.

CommWeb

XML Meets IVR With An LCD Will WAP and VoiceXML partner up?
Robert Richardson, Computer Telephony, February 5, 2001.

The Dallas Morning News

Glitches in voice portals are largely erased
Joy Dickinson, Dallas Morning News, February 1, 2001.

myprimetime

From Astronaut to Cybernaut
Suzanne Shaw, myprimetime.com, January 31, 2001.

Chicago Tribune

Voice Becoming the 'most powerful tool' on the Web
Barbara Rose, Chicago Tribune, January 29, 2001.

Former Tellme Networks corporate PR website presented a distinct news coverage section. Each news item was properly cited and linked to the source's website.

6. Provide high-quality photos

Working to tight deadlines makes journalists ask “do you have a photo to illustrate my report on your company?” whether is 5AM or 11 PM.

So make you sure you publish high-quality photo galleries both for a specific press-kit and for generic use (logo, product or facility images, top managers' photo etc.).

Media & Press

Image Gallery

Press Releases and Statements

Media Coverage

Image Gallery

Corporate

Collections

Institutional Campaigns

Brand Campaigns

Stores

Fabrica

Colors Magazine

Sustainability

Events

Video Gallery

Press Kit

Events

Contacts

Home » Media & Press » Image Gallery

Images are available for editorial purposes only, credits must be included.
Download is not allowed for commercial use.

CORPORATE

COLLECTIONS

INSTITUTIONAL CAMPAIGNS

BRAND CAMPAIGNS

STORES

FABRICA

In their Press Section, Benetton makes extensive use of high-quality photo galleries in their Press Section. Journalists can illustrate their reports with images from institutional or brand campaigns, collections, stores or facilities.

7. Write about your company's CSR policy and social projects

Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) information that can be found on your corporate PR website can change journalists' perception about your company.

Take a look below at how a journalist speaks about Wall-Mart before and after he visits the company PR website, in a usability study conducted by Jakob Nielsen ("Designing Websites to Maximize Press Relations", 3rd edition):

Before: “I think of Wall-Mart as an empire of evil who occupies the streets and squares of our quiet towns”.

After: “Well, I wasn’t aware of a Wall-Mart Foundation. 163 billion donated to communities is not a small sum. I’m impressed”

In the end, think of putting these 7 recommendations into a check-list. Benchmark your corporate PR website against it and make the necessary adjustments.

After a while ask journalists if they visited your website lately and how easy was for them to find information. I’m sure you’ll get a good feedback. It will mean your corporate PR website has become a trusted source for them. A source that will bring you more positive coverage from their part.

Further reading

Usability studies for corporate PR websites conducted by Jakob Nielsen:

- “Designing Websites to Maximize Press Relations”, 3rd edition
- “Presenting Company Information on Corporate Websites and in About Us Sections”, 2nd edition